SETU is here

The first university for the South East of Ireland is here, South East Technological University (SETU). We've combined culture and expertise and created something bigger, more ambitious and more transformative.

"Today would not be happening if it were not for the hard work put in across the past decade by staff, management, students and the people of the South East..." - Minister Simon Harris

"...a momentous day for the South East of Ireland..." - Dr Patrick Prendergast

SETU President announced

The inaugural president designate of SETU is Prof Veronica Campbell, a professor of neuropharmacology. She is a TCD fellow, former Dean of Graduate Studies and served as the College's bursar and Director of Innovation from 2015 until 2021. Prof Campbell has a proven track record of strategic project delivery during her time at Trinity.

"For the first time, the South East now has its own university, allowing students from the region to live at, or near to, home while pursuing an incredible breadth of courses, up to doctorate level. We hope to attract and retain those graduates who had previously left the region to study and work elsewhere." - Prof Veronica Campbell.

SETU celebration day for staff and students.

On Tuesday, 3 May 2022 thousands of SETU staff and students joined together to celebrate our new university. Events took place in campuses across the region, with both Prof Campbell and Minister Harris in attendance. There was huge excitement and a real party atmosphere as we acknowledged the collective effort made by everyone in creating SETU.
